You're literally a hostile foreign enemy living on American soil and working for a hostile foreign government, while your husband criminally took advantage of his access to our most critical military secrets.

Americans would be more than Constitutionally justified to shoot both of you.

Agreed, @hippyresident.

And the world needs far fewer Sandi Elhibir's and Liora Reznichenko's, imo.

Both are shitty, traitorous, criminal (Jew) dregs who do nothing for America except put American lives at risk, ruin livelihoods, threaten our NatSec & spy on us for our enemies.

Her husband's name is ELHIBIR and he works for Pratt & Whitney. Be a shame if we got him fired for being a traitorous USSR spy working with F-35 engines and whatnot.

Sandi Elhibir: Criminal Fraudster
Pratt & Whitney knowingly falsified inspection records and supplied non-conforming engine parts to the US military for F-22 and F-35 fighter jet engines. Sandi Elhibir was the Director of Quality at P&W's Middletown, Connecticut facility.
The settlement with Pratt & Whitney
In November 2023, Pratt & Whitney agreed to pay a $7 million settlement to the U.S. government over a criminal probe into falsified inspection records for engine parts used in F-22 and F-35 fighter jets.
Reuters reported that Sandi Elhibir, then-quality director at the company's Middletown plant, was found to have ignored internal compliance reports detailing inspection failures.
The Justice Department reportedly identified Elhibir's "managerial failure" as a key factor in the fraud.
It's possible that the government sought to recoup damages through the corporate settlement rather than a criminal case against Elhibir.
Potential reasons for no individual charges
Settlement over prosecution: In many fraud cases involving corporate misconduct, the government and the company reach a settlement that includes financial penalties and corrective actions. As part of the settlement, the government may choose not to pursue individual criminal charges.
Whistleblower case: Similar cases against defense contractors have involved False Claims Act lawsuits filed by whistleblowers. Such civil cases, if settled with the government, can resolve the misconduct without requiring a separate criminal prosecution of individuals.
Managerial failure vs. criminal intent: While Elhibir's actions were characterized as managerial failures contributing to fraud, proving criminal intent beyond a reasonable doubt in a trial can be difficult. The government may have concluded that a settlement with the company was a more efficient and certain resolution.
